

Pow Hill Country Park

What is special?

Pow Hill is set in moorland overlooking the Derwent Reservoir. The word Pow comes from Old English and means 'slow moving stream' which refers to the waterlogged boggy area in the north of the site. Rain falling on the surrounding moors is absorbed into the peaty ground. Water then seeps downhill into basins and shallow valleys, creating bogs. Over the years many upland bogs have disappeared through drainage but at Pow Hill it has survived.

Bog Asphodel

Cotton Grass

The bog contains specialised plants such as bog asphodel, cotton grass, ragged robin and marsh thistle and has been designated a Site of Special Scientific Interest (SSSI) - this designation is only given to the best wildlife habitats.

Heather moorland, grassland and coniferous woodland is home to animals such as red squirrels, adders, common lizard, slow worm and the green hairstreak butterfly. There are secluded glades for a quiet picnic and a number of seats which give panoramic views across the Derwent Reservoir towards Castleside and the Hownsgill viaduct.

Access is permitted to the shores of the reservoir where fishing and sailing are available. The path is closed during winter to prevent disturbance to ground nesting birds.

Help us to protect this rare habitat

- The bog is a very sensitive habitat and we ask visitors not to walk across it. It can easily be viewed from the Easy Access path.
- Keep your dog on a lead during the bird breeding season (March to August).
- Clean up after your dog.

Accessibility statement

Pow Hill has a linear Easy Access route which is gently undulating and rises gradually uphill from the car park. This route has a 2 metre wide sealed surface and has seats at regular intervals. There is a network of paths and tracks throughout the site. These can be narrow and are made of a mixture of unsealed surface with some large stones and tree roots, bare earth and mown grass. There are numerous sets of steps and some steep slopes. Some routes may be difficult to negotiate in bad weather.
